The Troodos Range Mountain Resorts

Winner of the Eden 2007 Award as ‘Best Emerging Rural European Destination’

The main mountain resort of the island, PLATRES, is situated in the fragrant pine and cedar forested Troodos mountains, 1,100 metres above sea level. A fresh, cool location in the heat of the summer and a skiing base in winter, it is ideal for those who enjoy the countryside and walking, or just sitting in one of the many tree-shaded open-air cafés and admiring the view.

Surrounded by orchards, PEDHOULAS is a small resort, a maze of narrow steep streets, and is well known for its Sunday markets, its medieval church adorned with frescoes, and profusion of springtime cherry blossom.

KAKOPETRIA, approximately 700 metres above the sea, is a popular summer resort and a rich fruit growing village. There are two parts; the original, medieval settlement steep and stony and the modern resort with shops, cafés, banks and even a public swimming pool. There are numerous ancient frescoed churches nearby.

AGROS is a quiet, hospitable village in a more remote area amidst vineyards on the sunny southern side of the mountain range. There are a few restaurants and cafés in the village, and the unspoilt area offers plenty of opportunities for lovely walks.

These are perfect bases from which to visit picturesque mountain monasteries or painted Byzantine churches, for countless scenic drives through pretty villages and for many memorable walks and picnics in the beautiful countryside.
